1883 A history of our involvement in late twentieth century campaigns against global poverty and how they came to focus on women. A war on global poverty provides a fresh account of our involvement in campaigns to end global poverty in the 1970s and 1980s from the decline of modernization programs to the rise of microcredit. The book looks beyond familiar histories of development and explains why poverty programs increasingly focused on women. Antipoverty advocates recast women as entrepreneurs and imagined microcredit with its tiny loans as a grassroots solution. Meyerowitz shows that at the very moment when destitution in the more conservative 1980s the war on global poverty turned decisively toward market based projects in the private sector development experts and social democrats and religious humanists they rejected the notion that economic growth would trickle down to the poor and they proposed programs to redress inequities between and within nations in an emerging women in development movement they positioned women as economic actors who could help lift families and nations out of destitution in the more conservative 1980s the war on global poverty turned decisively toward market based projects in the private sector development experts and antipoverty advocates recast women as entrepreneurs and imagined microcredit with its tiny loans as a grassroots solution. Meyerowitz shows that at the very moment when the overextension of credit left poorer nations bank rupt to impoverished women came to replace more ambitious proposals that aimed at redistribution based on a social democratic agenda.
